Management Discussion of Fund Performance

Investment Objectives and Strategies

PIMCO Low Duration Monthly Income Fund (Canada) (“the Fund”) seeks to maximize current income while aiming to preserve investment capital with a secondary goal of providing long term capital appreciation.

In order to achieve its objectives, the Fund invests primarily in a diversified portfolio of global fixed income instruments of varying maturities.

Risk

No changes affecting the overall risk associated with investing in the Fund were made during the period. The risks of investing in the Fund remain as outlined in the Fund’s most recent Simplified Prospectus. Accordingly, the Fund remains suitable for the same investors outlined in the Simplified Prospectus.

Results of Operations

Series A units of the Fund returned 1.82% and Series A (US$) units of the Fund returned 2.09%, net of fees, during the 6-month reporting period ending June 30, 2023. The Fund’s benchmarks, the Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate 1-3yr Index (CAD, Hedged) returned 0.87%, and the Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate 1-3yr Index (USD) returned 1.15% during the same reporting period. The net returns of the other series of units of the Fund are similar to those of Series A and Series A (US$) respectively, except for the expense structure differences.

The following market conditions were prevalent during the six-month reporting period:

In Q1, the collapse of Silicon Valley Bank (“SVB”) and subsequent merger between UBS and Credit Suisse took center stage. Shockwaves reverberated through markets following the failure of SVB, with the 2-year Treasury posting its largest three-day slide since 1987 as investors flocked to quality. Volatility remained elevated as the market’s confidence in Credit Suisse deteriorated and the Swiss National Bank orchestrated its takeover by UBS. Stock indices fell and bond yields rallied globally as concerns of financial contagion dampened risk sentiment. Despite exceeding expectations, inflation data continued to cool, spurring mixed market reactions.

Instability in the financial sector and broadly cooling inflation led investors to revise their expectations for central bank rate hikes as a sharp pullback in bank lending may slow the economy. The Federal Reserve delivered two 25 bps hikes over the quarter, including one in March despite heightened volatility. The central bank also revised its forward guidance for rates, softening its commitment to future hikes while maintaining the same 5.1% terminal rate projection from December. The Bank of England also raised policy rates twice over the quarter (+50 and +25 bps, respectively), and markets are now pricing in that the central bank will hike just once more as inflation has likely peaked. Similar to the U.S. and U.K., the European Central Bank raised policy rates twice (each time +50 bps); however, the central bank has signaled that it will continue to raise policy rates to lower core inflation.

In Q2, concerns over a possible U.S. debt default prompted yields on short-dated Treasury bills to exceed 5.3%, and the cost of 1-year U.S.

Treasury default swaps reached an all-time high. Risk sentiment remained robust, however, as markets were optimistic about negotiations. The S&P 500 hit a 9-month high after the House of Representatives passed a bill to raise the debt ceiling, which then passed through the Senate without much excitement from markets.

Signs of easing inflation prompted the Fed to offer dovish rhetoric earlier in the quarter; however, resilient growth and a swifter-than-expected resolution of stresses within the banking sector caused the Fed to signal that at least two additional rate hikes will be needed to combat inflation. U.S. headline inflation continued its decline over the quarter, rising at a 4% annual pace in May, which was the lowest reading in over two years. However, core inflation remained stubbornly high as much of the inflationary decline has been due to easing fuel and energy prices. Growth and inflation metrics have begun to diverge, prompting central banks to take different paths. The Federal Reserve hiked its policy rate once (+25 bps) before pausing in June, only to then signal that at least two additional hikes will be needed to combat inflation.

Over the reporting period, the Fund’s interest rate and currency strategies detracted from performance, while spread sector strategies contributed.

Recent Developments

An expected pullback in bank lending and a possible U.S. debt default led to uncertainty in the economic outlook. Risk sentiment was robust despite debt concerns surrounding the U.S. debt ceiling, with the MSCI World finishing the quarter up 6.99% and credit spreads broadly tightening. The Fed hiked its policy rate once more (+25 bps) in the second quarter before pausing, and then signaled that at least two additional hikes will be needed to combat sticky inflation. Meanwhile, global developed central banks continued their hiking cycles and maintained hawkish forward guidance due to persistently stubborn inflation prints.

In our base case we see a weakening of the U.S. economy in late summer or fall that will likely prompt the Fed to pause rate hikes past July. The Fed is combatting a two-handed U.S. economy, where on one hand inflation and labor market data has remained resilient, and, on the other hand, payroll growth has continued to decelerate and sticky inflation sectors, such as rental inflation, seem to be peaking. However, if market data continues to prove resilient, the Fed may be pressured to keep hiking beyond July, increasing the risk of a sharper slowdown. In this uncertain environment, we favor portfolio flexibility and liquidity to respond to events and potentially take advantage of opportunities. We continue to favor U.S. duration provided nominal rates remain higher relative to other developed countries. We also maintained a slight allocation to TIPS in the portfolio based on attractive valuations and as a hedge against a potential inflation overshoot.

In this uncertain environment, we favor portfolio flexibility and liquidity to respond to events and potentially take advantage of opportunities. We continue to favor U.S. duration provided nominal rates remain higher relative to other developed countries. We also maintained a slight allocation to treasury inflation protected securities in the portfolio based on attractive valuations and as a hedge against a potential inflation overshoot.

In spread sectors, we continue to be selective within corporate credit, favoring systemically important banks with direct central bank support, with a focus on the senior most part of the capital structure, and defensive sectors such as telecomm and healthcare. In securitized credit, we continue to look for opportunities to add exposure, particularly in U.S. agency mortgage backed securities given attractive valuations.

* Information presented is for the period from February 8, 2019 (commencement of operations) to December 31, 2019.

⁽⁴⁾ This is not a reconciliation of the beginning and ending net assets per unit.

⁽⁵⁾ This information is presented as at June 30, 2023 and December 31 of the years shown.

⁽⁷⁾ The trading expense ratio represents total commissions and other portfolio transaction costs expressed as an annualized percentage of daily average net asset value during the period.

⁽⁸⁾ The Fund's portfolio turnover rate indicates how actively the Fund's portfolio advisor manages its portfolio investments. A portfolio turnover rate of 100% is equivalent to the Fund buying and selling all of the securities in its portfolio once in the course of the year. The higher a fund's portfolio turnover rate in a year, the greater the trading costs payable by the fund in the year, and the greater the chance of an investor receiving taxable capital gains in the year. There is not necessarily a relationship between a high turnover rate and the performance of a fund.

Management Fees

The Manager is responsible for the operations of the Fund including arranging for the provision of services such as investment management, transfer agency, fund accounting and other administrative services. In consideration for the provision of such services, the Manager is paid a management fee by the Fund that is calculated and accrued daily and is payable monthly. With respect to Series I and Series I (US$) units, management fees are negotiated between the investor and the Manager. These fees are paid directly by the investor and are not an expense of the Fund. Many of the operating expenses of the Fund are largely payable by the Manager and not by the Fund. Management fees are used to pay trailing commissions, in connection with Series A, Series A (US$), Series O, and Series O (US$) units, to registered dealers for the services and/or advice that they provide to investors.

The breakdown of the services received as a percentage of the management fees are as follows:

	Management Fee	Trailing commissions paid to dealers	Investment management and general administration
Series A and Series A (US$)	1.25%	40%	60%
Series F and Series F (US$)	0.75%	0%	100%
